キタキツネ

Vulpes vulpes schrenckii

A young bat, likely a Japanese Free-tailed Bat, is hanging upside down from a thin branch. Its body is dark brown with a lighter, fuzzy belly. Its wings are partially spread, showing the dark membrane. The bat is surrounded by lush green leaves, some of which have small holes, suggesting it might be in a forest or garden. The lighting is soft, highlighting the texture of the bat's fur and the surrounding foliage.
